

Amanda Tuninetti is a Director at Rock Creek Global Advisors, an international economic policy advisory firm, where she advises multinational companies, financial institutions, and trade associations on economic policy, financial regulation, trade and investment issues, and other international regulatory and policy matters.

Ms. Tuninetti was formerly an associate at Covington & Burling LLP, where she represented clients in public international law disputes and white collar investigations and litigation. She has experience working on complex international and transnational litigation and arbitration matters, as well as advising governments, companies, and trade associations on trade and investment policy issues.

Ms. Tuninetti previously served as an economics teaching fellow at Harvard College, and conducted research on financial regulation for the Committee on Capital Markets Regulation. She also previously interned at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, where she focused on transatlantic security cooperation.

Ms. Tuninetti received her BA from Princeton University (summa cum laude), with a concentration in the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs and certificates in Contemporary European Politics and Russian and Eurasian Studies. She received her JD from Harvard Law School, where she served on the editorial boards of the Harvard Business Law Review and the Harvard International Law Journal. She speaks Spanish, French, and conversational Russian.